Abstract

In the second phase of the Executive Yuan's program to strengthen Taiwan's social safety net, which began in 2021, the third strategy is to deploy community mental health centers. New Taipei City's mental health care policy foregrounds case management with equal importance attached to all three levels of prevention. Under this policy, community mental health centers are equipped with professionals of diverse expertise to inventory and develop all types of mental health service schemes and to facilitate intersystem and interprofessional utilization of resources and collaboration, with the objective of improving citizens' mental health.
